Henry's Japanese Trip

Earlier this year Henry de Silva assembled another dozen intrepid Vets to explore unknown territory – this time Japan. After the usual long and tedious flight, the group arrived in Tokyo to be met by Daizo Kamaguchi, whom Henry had recruited at the Bath world championships to organise a match with local veteran fencers.

Helpful and solicitous, he guided us to our hotel in the former red light district of Asakusa, conveniently close to a tube station and numerous restaurants catering for visitors to a nearby Buddhist temple. After a day of sightseeing in the rain, we experienced the unique Japanese form of theatre known as Kabuki.

Henry's Army in Japanese Mode!

At the main sports centre for fencing the following day, we found that, instead of the expected matches, individual competitions had been arranged. Fencing is even more of a minority sport in Japan than it is in the UK, but it has been practised since the 1920s and there were a dozen or more experienced vets at each weapon ready to do battle. They were fit and fast, so that none of us survived beyond the L8 in foil and epee, and only Tony Bardell in the mixed sabre event reached the semi-finals. But it was an enjoyable day's fencing followed in the evening by a dinner during which there was a ritual exchange of presents and much sake flowed. Cont on page 2

Another free day allowed people to sample the delights of shopping in Tokyo's high-tech department stores, watching the organised chaos of Shinjuku station, which handles more than 2 million passengers a day, or strolling in a park leading to the popular Meiji temple. For those with sufficient stamina, the evening provided a last opportunity to see the dazzling illuminations of Tokyo at night.

Then it was on to Osaka by bullet train, but first we had to negotiate the underground system with fencing bags and suitcases during the rush hour – an 'interesting' experience. During the smooth 250-mile ride to Osaka, we enjoyed views of snow-capped Mount Fuji in the distance, but looked in amazement at the built-up area for the entire journey, with no open countryside to be seen.

The next day we were met by another host, Tsuyoshi Haratani, who took us to Kwansai Gakuin University, whose keen fencers demonstrated that youth and speed can sometimes overcome experience and cunning. At a splendid meal afterwards we were treated to the traditional Japanese dish of seafood cooked over small braziers at the table.

Hearing that we wanted to visit the ancient city of Kyoto, our generous host arranged for himself and two friends to take us by car to some of the most important sites. This allowed us to enjoy a wonderful last day in Japan, including the rare sight of a Maiko – an apprentice Geisha – in full kimono and platform shoes introducing herself to the houses where she would, after completing her 6-year apprenticeship, entertain clients.

Even today, Japan appears to be a land of mystery and strange customs in our eyes. For a people among the most educated and technologically advanced in the world, the Japanese appear to the first-time visitor from Britain to be noticeably different from Europeans or North Americans. Here are a few of the most striking differences:

- Around 20% of the population wears a white mask covering the nose and mouth, said to be because of allergies. But is Japanese pollen more virulent than any other in the world, are they more considerate than other people about not spreading germs, or are they just slightly paranoid – who knows?
- Many men and women ride bicycles, but they are all identical in style – no crossbar and with a wire basket at the front for shopping.
- Most hotels provide guests with the traditional Japanese kimono and jacket, changed every day, and have loo seats with two heat settings – high or low.
- Ritual washing of hands is commonplace, even on underground platforms with some stations having a trough against the wall where passengers can wash their hands before proceeding on their journey.
- Shoes are normally removed when entering a house and many public buildings.
- Politeness and consideration are the norm – couples at restaurant tables move to make room for a group, there is little graffiti or rowdy behaviour, and bullet train conductors bow to each carriage on entering and leaving.
- Buddhist shrines abound where people can make offerings and leave prayers – one in Tokyo is dedicated to the racoon dog and includes plastic replicas of the little varmints.

England News

All entries from England fencers for the Commonwealth Veterans must go through England Fencing

.I suggest that fencers enter the competition directly, but let me know that they have entered and I will co-ordinate the England side.

A reminder that the England teams will be chosen from the best individual performances on the day
Regards, John Crouch

European Open Veterans Tournaments

There is a regular calendar of Open Tournaments for Veterans in Europe some of which are set out in the table below.

It is proposed that if there is enough interest that we put together some trips for groups of Vets to take part in these tournaments later this year and next to enjoy the sights of the various European cities in which they are being held.

Some budget costs, including flights and accommodation, have been included in the table below. More detailed information will be included in the near future.

If you are interested in taking part in any of the trips please contact, in the first instance, Dave Sweeney on 01453 758372 or at mrdsweeney@hotmail.com.
